Senior Housing in Worthington

by National Church Residences
President & CEO, Mark Ricketts

Wednesday, February 13

Griswold Center Town Hall

A recent community survey found that about one-third of Worthington residents know a senior who moved out of the community because of a lack of appropriate housing choices. More than 80% of respondents also agreed that the City of Worthington should do more to promote senior living options. Whether a senior, someone looking forward to retirement, a caregiver or neighbor, Worthington can continue improving its support for families – that’s the theme of the presentation by National Church Residences President and CEO Mark Ricketts who will speak at the Griswold Center.

National Church Residences, a national nonprofit headquartered in Upper Arlington, advances better living for seniors so they can remain home for life. With 310 affordable housing communities in 25 states and Puerto Rico, it is the nation’s largest non-for-profit provider of affordable senior housing.

Mr. Ricketts, a thirty-plus year Worthington resident, has served in various leadership roles at National Church Residences for nearly 20 years, assuming the top post in 2014. He is married to Julie, an accomplished artist, and they have three children.
